Dear Sirs:

I find the proposed Final Judgement inadequate. It does not redress the monopolistic actions committed by Microsoft, nor does it inhibit their ability to commit similar actions in the future.

It makes no attempt to address "ill-gotten gains" garnered by microsoft through its anticompetitive practices, even though the company's illegal tactics have placed it in a very advantageous position. In order to make anticompetitive behavior unprofitable, there should be substantive punishment.

But more importantly, there seems to be little in the proposal to prevent future abuses.

Sincerely,
Daniel Mickey
